Surveys:
Survey on Receipts, Expenditures and Consumption of Households 1963, 1968, 1973, 1978
This survey is also called the Household Budget Survey and is used by Jain (1975), van Ginneken and Park (1984) and UN (1985). The survey was conducted by the Federal Statistical Office including all private households. In 1978, a total of 18665 households were sampled. The interviews were made in December 1978. The income concept was gross income including all current receipts from employment, transfers (including gifts from family members working abroad), crafts work, imputed value of self-produced goods consumed in the household, sales of assets, credits received and insurance claims. Contributions for public health, education and for other collective requirements were deducted. Imputed rent was not included.

Data from Transmonee (2004)
Income: Data are based on net incomes with a detailed coverage of income sources: Wages and salaries, self-employment income, income from cooperatives, sick payments, pensions, family/child allowances, maternity and other child related allowances, unemployment benefits, other social benefits (including social assistance), property income and other income (including private transfers). No information about the survey is available.
